Mostly, the need of web solutions (including but not limited to web applications) is actually the implicit need of advertising a service, a product, a brand, etc. It is probably the most efficient way of advertising if it's well, professionally done.

The huge advantage of Internet advertising is the number of people who has access to it. At the beginning of year 2006, there were over one billion Internet users worldwide according to Internet World Stats. It is also worth to mention that at the same time, there were almost 80 million registered domains worldwide according to Domain Tools. In other words, there are billions of web pages available for the above mentioned number of internet users.

The big question that (should) arise to each and every individual or company who will hire a web solutions provider is how many of this enormous (and increasingly) amount of people who do have Internet access will find THEIR web site or web application. It is well known that the best source of visitors (or potential customers) for a web site are search engines. This is where SEO (Search Engine Optimization) becomes a MUST for a web site or web application to be efficient.
